Important: If you do not apply for aid prior to admission and by the published deadlines, you will not be eligible for Smith College grant aid until you complete 64 credits at Smith. You must have a financial aid application (PROFILE or FAFSA) on file by the deadline. Applicants who have financial need, as calculated by Smith College, and who submit the required documents on time will be eligible for Smith need-based financial aid.

- ▶ This policy does not apply to students who applied for need-based aid by the deadline but were determined to be ineligible.
- ▶ Exceptions to this policy will be considered only if you have a documented family emergency or a drastic change in family circumstances.
- ▶ Students who postpone their enrollment must apply for financial aid by the published deadlines at the time they initially apply for admission.
- ▶ These instructions apply to domestic students only. International applicants should look at our website for instructions, forms and deadlines.

Be sure to observe filing deadlines by allowing enough time for mailing and processing of documents. Deadlines refer to receipt of the forms. If you have problems that might delay your application or questions about forms and procedures, contact us before the deadline by e-mail or phone so we can work with you.

Complete all required forms clearly with the most accurate information available to you, even if you must estimate. If you file with estimated data, make sure that your figures are realistic and as accurate as possible. The student's name and Smith-assigned ID number should appear on all forms and correspondence.

Consult the Smith College publication Investing in a Smith Education for details on the determination of need and the awarding of need-based grants, loans and work study. Smith meets the full calculated financial need of eligible students whose files are complete by the appropriate deadline.
